Tarcoles River

The Tarcoles River is known for the large population of crocodiles that inhabit it. It is considered to have the highest population of crocodiles in the world. The entire river covers over 2000 kilometers and empties into the Pacific Ocean. Tourists can walk along the famous crocodile bridge and observe the semi-aquatic reptiles wade through the water and lay on the sand. Enjoy this once in a lifetime experience, and of course, remember to be respectful of the crocodiles and stay safe on the bridge.

Manuel Antonio

Manuel Antonio National Park is located on the Central Pacific Coast of Costa Rica. The rich biodiversity of this area, paired with a wealth of activities, makes this a destination that offers something for everyone. Manuel Antonio is the premier destination of the Central Pacific region, offering a variety of small intimate hotels artistically built into a rainforest hillside between town and the popular Manuel Antonio National Park.

National Park

Named by Forbes in 2011 as one of the world's most beautiful parks, Manuel Antonio National Park is a paradise filled with a wide variety of animal life. The park contains three gorgeous light sand beaches perfect for relaxing, swimming, snorkeling, and surfing. You can also expect to see sloths, iguanas, squirrel monkeys, and hundreds of species of birds within the forest. Don't miss out on the opportunity to witness the magnificence of one of Costa Rica's most stunning natural destinations.
